Gibson Center for Behavioral Change is convening a multi-disciplinary team for planning activities concentrating on developing practitioners who can respond to individuals experiencing a behavioral health crisis or to co-respond to a law enforcement encounter with appropriate care and supports.

Southeast Missouri

Randolph Caring Community Partnership is designing a comprehensive strategic plan with a multi-disciplinary team of stakeholders for improving responses to people in crisis and minimizing criminal justice involvement. This work complements efforts they are leading to prevent firearm suicides in the community.

St. Louis

Freedom Community Center (FCC) is collaborating with partners in North St. Louis on a program that builds on their existing work. In partnership with impacted community members, FCC will pilot a healing justice intervention that will respond to incidents within 24-48 hours. This approach focuses on providing immediate support to those who have experienced violence and to those who have caused harm so both parties can get needed resources and meaningfully heal.

Springfield

Burrell Behavioral Health has collaborated with the Springfield Police Department to launch a Mental Health Mobile Team. The project builds upon several years of planning and partnership with the health department, police department, 911 emergency communications, and Community Partnership of the Ozarks to address growing challenges related to mental health and substance use.

Southeast Missouri

Gibson Center for Behavioral Change is convening a multi-disciplinary team for planning activities concentrating on developing practitioners who can respond to individuals experiencing a behavioral health crisis or to co-respond to a law enforcement encounter with appropriate care and supports.